As San Diego County's higher education infrastructure accelerates into a new era of expansion and modernization, public owners are expanding their use of collaborative design-build delivery tools. Across the region, community college districts are actively procuring, designing, and constructing billions of dollars in facilities investments. However, navigating shifting market dynamics, trade labor capacity, budget pressures, and evolving procurement models requires continuous alignment between owners, design-builders, architects, engineers, specialty trade partners, and construction managers. Join DBIA-WPR San Diego for a candid panel discussion featuring senior facility leaders from four major local community college districts. This session will dive directly into the operational realities of project execution and Design-Build Done Right® in practice.
